17. 다음 글의 제목으로 가장 적절한 것을 고르시오.

Malaria is known as one of mankind's top killers. Challenging conventional ideas, scientists in Europe conducted a daring experiment. They used mosquitoes as flying needles to deliver a vaccine of live malaria parasites through their bites. They were astounded by the results. People in the vaccine group acquired immunity to malaria. The experiment was done in a lab at Radboud University in the Netherlands. Although no specific vaccine was created, the experiment showed how whole parasites can be used like a vaccine to protect against the disease. The concept of the experiment will enter commercial development. Malaria kills nearly a million people each year in Africa. Let's hope for a cure for malaria.

- ① Malaria: Still Killer in Africa
- ② A Daring Experiment on Malaria
- ③ A Powerful Medicine for Malaria
- ④ The Relations between Immunity and Vaccine

18. 다음 구절을 읽고 주어진 빈칸에 가장 알맞은 것을 고르시오.

The truth is that vitamin C plays a fundamental role in all forms of life. Despite the controversies surrounding vitamin C, studies have confirmed the vitamin's ability to fight the cold and flu. It is also argued that vitamin C can reduce the risk of heart disease, stroke and perhaps cancer in some people, which can prospectively extend life span. Curiously, however, plants make the vitamin C from simple sugars, and it protects them from sunlight-generated free radicals. Nearly all animals also make their own vitamin C from glucose or blood sugar, but humans and a small number of other species do not. The reason is not that _____. Rather, a key gene involved in vitamin C production was damaged in our ancestors some 35 million years ago, and we continue to inherit this nonfunctioning gene.

- ① we are less prone to disease
- ② vitamin C is genetically formed
- ③ we are more advanced biologically
- ④ evolutionary process is not yet completed

Alchemy was practiced in many different cultures around the world, including ancient China, the early Arab world, and medieval Europe. Up until the late 18th century, alchemy was considered one of the most important physical sciences. Alchemists would experiment with the combination of different elements to produce new elements. The desire to turn base metals into gold or to create a potion to extend life became unhealthy obsessions for many alchemists. This mingling of greed and science led to permanent damage to alchemy's reputation. Ultimately, alchemists never achieved their goals of turning metals into gold or finding a magic potion to extend life. Their real successes, (A)_____, were in learning about chemistry and physics. In their search for other things, they discovered many useful chemicals and invented scientific processes that we still use today. (B)_____ they invented gunpowder, they learned how to test and refine chemicals, and they created inks, dyes, paints, make-up, glass and ceramics. So, as spin-offs of their research, their work gave us many useful products and ideas.
