It was weird being back at Foothills Hospital, in the same room where she rested after going through many hours of labor and finally giving birth to me. There were beautiful hand-painted pictures on the wall and a clock that ticked so loud that it sounded like a timer on an explosive. In the corner was a vase of flowers surrounded by gifts, get-well cards and stuffed animals. I sat on the left side of the bed holding her hand. "Mom," I said. "Today I bought a new watch. It has a video game built into it!" Usually, stuff like that would get me into lots of trouble, because she didn't want me to waste money on stupid things. Today was an exception, though; today, she didn't say a word. It was the only time I ever wished that I would get yelled at, but she just lay there asleep.

It seems odd that a sound can sometimes be heard at its source and (A)vanish / appear at a distance, only to be heard again still farther away. For a long time this "zone of silence" defeated all attempts at its explanation. At length a meteorologist discovered that layers of air of different temperature interfere with sound. Since the air immediately above the ground is usually warmer than that in higher layers the sound waves are deflected diagonally upwards. The consequences are easily deduced. A certain distance from the source a sound becomes (B)inaudible / audible because it passes over our heads. At a height of about twenty-five miles, however, there is usually another layer of warm air and this deflects the sound back towards the earth. This explains why there is a region of audibility (C)within / beyond the zone of silence.

However, there are no pure market economies - all real-world market economies have some degree of government involvement.

Dear Amy,

Don't give up! I know you can do this assignment. I think you need to start by changing the way you look at yourself and your metaphor. You have already come up with many things that are half one thing and half another thing.

I want you to make a list of things that are good combinations of two parts. There are lots of things that are better when they're combined with something else. Here, I'll start your list: peanut butter and jelly are better together than they are apart. And think about all those exciting varieties of hybrid roses.

If you keep on going with this list, I think you can finish the assignment by Friday. If you're still stuck, come and talk to me before then.

Mrs. Thomas

It is known that they can smell 30,000 times better than us. Many scientists believe that's how they smell their way back home when they are ready to give birth. While European artists had developed a tradition of working in a realistic style, other cultures had a long tradition of abstract art form. Some native American artists also work in an abstract style. Navajo Indian artists make abstract paintings that do not use oil paints, watercolors, or any kind of wet materials. Their artworks are called sand paintings because the artist's materials are crushed charcoal, cornmeal, crushed rocks, and sand. The artist makes a sand painting by pouring these materials onto the ground according to one of hundreds of traditional designs. It is a delicate task to make this kind of artwork because, as you can imagine, once the materials are poured it is very hard to correct mistakes.

Thousands of discarded computers from Western Europe and the U.S.A. arrive in the ports of West Africa every day, ending up in massive toxic dumps, where children burn and pull them apart to extract metals for cash. Driving home through the quiet lane early one morning, my headlights picked out a shape in the middle of the road. Only at the last moment did the shape turn its head and look straight at me. The owl apparently neither heard nor saw my car coming. It was too late. There was nothing I could do. There was a horrible sound as I hit the bird head-on. I thought about stopping to see if it was lying injured yet alive by the side of the road, but decided that it wouldn't have stood a chance.
